

Tame My Wild Heart

Each day goes by
As a marker on my soul.
Notches carved into walls
Of my prison cell.
How many days until I am free
Of the shackles of you?

You said all we need is love
And you drowned me in it.
It's running through my veins
I bleed you but I need you.
You're all I ever needed.

I see shadows of you
In other faces but
They don't feel like you.
No other touch, no other kiss,
Nothing tames my wild heart.

My wild heart shattered,
But I'll gather the pieces
And scatter them around the world,
Like ashes.

Siren Call To The Sea

You say I'm cocooned in love,
That you're alone at sea.
Your wake is crashing on my coast,
I feel your thunder, your rain.

You're way offshore,
Shrouded in the fog of your heart.
I throw you a lifeline but
You're drowning in a storm.

I am your beacon on the rocks,
But my light is out.
You can't see me right now,
I'm there, I'll always be there.

Justice Unserved

Your discordant rumbles pierce my flesh,
Like tiny swords
And lacerate what is left
Of my soul.

Each syllable punctures a new hole,
In staccato.
Blood seeps through for all the world
To witness.

I add more layers to shroud your sin
So you are safe
From the justice you deserve,
My lover.

Make me your canvas on which to paint
Pain from times past.
I give myself to you now,
Do your worst.

Fields Of Whispering Secrets

Tiny flecks of dust danced in the fading sun.

I grabbed your hand and took you deeper,

Across the fields of whispering secrets

That held our dreams suspended in wild flowers.

You moved like the swaying grasses as I held you,

Combing your thoughts, weaving them with mine.

Roosting sparrows inspected us intently

As we became one beneath a canopy of leaves that suggested what was to come.

I only hope that one day we can dive together

Through the sea of doubt.

To once again find that strange sunshine

That fueled our furnace and spliced our hearts.