

“I Shout My Unspoken Thoughts”

Sometimes I wish you forgot I existed
Because I know it hurt you that I never called
It's like your world stopped revolving
While the rest of the globe kept spinning
I always got that otherworldly vibe from you
Or maybe you just lived life your own way
I'd like to think you're out there in Saturn's rings
You were always cold so you'd fit right in

I wish the rest of space could hear your voice
Chipper like a bird's song
High like an angel's choir
Singing a tune that'll always burn into my memories
Perhaps you always felt like you were in space
Left deserted, escaping from gravity
Surrounded by nothingness
At least that's how I think it'd feel stuck in a hospital

I resent how distance and time ripped us apart like
Torn fabric, Strings held together by memories
You did your best to stitch it up with kisses
But your needlework went unnoticed
I can blame it on the fact that I hate phone calls
Or that I was distracting myself with work
But none of those excuses will ever
Erase the pain I caused you

I never got to say goodbye
Or tell you I loved you that day
The day you were stripped from our world
That same world you made so much brighter
With your presence alone
You always made me feel special
Did I make you feel that way too?
I shout to you wherever you are

Taste my voice within my tears
