

The Exchange

The soft distortion in the background flickering some winged light this thing offers a heart of gold, “this weight bears a heavy price”, it said.

The moment is now, except for the absentminded.
Holding a pact, made of dust saints and devils both grin combined at the spine locked together with their horns and halos.

Disease

The legs of staring eyes stand ground watching the curled body

No one can help when inside the circle teaming with hands tearing flesh

These are not people of humanity but people of dis-ease

Chaos of no forgiveness the cancer of non-discrimination this sickness within the moment will not be taken back only lingering droplets only lingering noise only lingering silence.

The repercussions' have settled comfortably in apologizes forever tarnishing true forgiveness.

The Damp of bedwetting

Somehow conforming to the mess that is cradling the half not falling Chances are not expected on time The head moving side to side aware of disapproval and home managed to keep its charm.

Departure from novelty some other time some other place sitting and waiting Everyday is damp
when not wet

Zoological

When the clasp has been removed the heavy sway of the metal box refuses to be free nothing pushes it out and it cannot move.

If chains enslave invisible ones are phantom limbs the images of memories repeat the present is not real anymore and somehow it lingers.

Bonding to the functional disease by contently clawing the dripping noise of chaos.
The faces peering from the side looking with knives cutting parts bleeding the suggestion of touch.

The affect of guilt from something elsewhere lost with the open-eyed path

Centerpiece

Lay perfectly still in the middle yet moving in the center. To expect a strange fixation of space, in infinite time that can dust it off; it's bounty less body lays in a burned empty vessel, it cries out a song of peace. In amazement, it's certain caged prophecy's seem to grow by the clocks second hand, that show me a paralyzing look of anticipation, trick's my mind slowly into sleep.