

The Next Dawn

When dawn rises over the valley and I am not here, know that I love you, please don't shed a tear.

My sorrow for the suffering I caused you is abundantly sincere; my grief and despair made my conscious unclear.

My mind and sight are fogged with confusion no more, For God has restored me, down to my core.

I can see, feel, and think as beautifully as ever. Worry of me not, for I am in His beloved and treasure.

My arms will be open wide when we are reunited one day, I'll be dancing with joy for you at Heaven's gateway.

I am with you in spirit, you still have so much to do. Conquer every mountain you wish; I'll be celebrating with you.

Pour out love in all of your actions and remember to always bestow compassion.

So, when dawn rises over the valley and I am not here, remember our good times and let your pain disappear.
