

The Light from Nowhere

She feels her way through the darkness light
In hopes that one day, she actually might Find her way, back to her dreams
But pure darkness makes it hard it seems
Her hands are eyes, outstretched to see
Feeling shapes and objects, in obscurity
“How’d this happen? Why am I here?”
Are questions she asks herself in fear
Her trembling subsides and she pushes on
For the darkest night is before the dawn
With a glimmer of hope, a smile appears
Though it’s hard to see, through all her tears
She trips and falls, but gets right back up
She’s bruised and bleeding, but her heart is tough
“Just one more step.” She says out loud
Walking through a cold dark could
“The end is near, or it has to be”
“I’m far too weak and I still can’t see”
But time goes on, and the dark remains
The faults aren’t hers, but she takes the blames
Her hands are bruised and her heart is scared
Never complaining that life’s too hard
But she trips and falls, one last time
And from the ground, she still can’t find
Her reason for pushing, through the darkest light
And her despair falls out of sight

She lays her head just softly down
With darkness encircling, all around
She loses strength and takes one last breath
Her eyes are closed as she welcomes death
She's giving up for she's much too weak
But as her tears glide down her cheek
She begins to crawl with forceful strength
Then to her feet, till her eyes may faint
But her heart is pumping and she's running fast
She still can see, but she forgives her past
With one last push, she is freed from pain
Looking forward with her life to gain
Now, what caused this sudden burst of love?
What blessing poured down from above?
Why'd she crawl and run so fast?
For he was certain, she wouldn't last
So what changed her mind when she didn't care?
It was nothing more, than her light from nowhere.