

It's So Easy

Starting with innocent curiosity
The slow and subtle seduction, becoming the life of the party.
Impossible to resist the attraction of abandoning every little worry.

The constant struggle to survive spawning a world of my own creation Forgetting about the need to strive
The slow cycle of self destruction
When everything begins to dive

Embracing the side of insanity.
Driving away thoughts of distress
Escaping to darkness from reality
Sinking further into an abyss.

That Time

I woke up in a red race car bed.
Hung over, confused, sunlight piercing into my throbbing head.

Cursing myself for not going home.
Seduced by the promise of a good time.
A new boy toy to make all mine.

A case of sudden morning syndrome,
last memories formed at the bar.
No idea how it led to a red race car bed.

Party Girl

She remembered the nights of not making it home
Images too blurry to be called memories
The nights of always feeling alone

She remembered the walks of shame home
Every wild night another simple distraction along with busy days going through the motions.

She remembered how easily darkness could be ignored
Striving to a goal with a whole new life in store
Past haunting her days, night keeps her running

Karmic justice stripped away her light
She remembered childhood joys and tragedies consuming all of her mind, affecting her moods

She remembered never knowing how to feel Mocking smiles, laughing at death, crying for fun too brave to want to die, foolish enough to try

She remembered everything except this growing fear.

Barside Affair

I've fallen in love with you for the night.

Swimming in your drunken eyes

for tonight.

Behind my own obstructed sight

for the night.

I am forever yours

for tonight.

Embracing you eternally

for the night.

I love you as you are

for tonight.

We are one entity

for the night.

You are my whole world

for tonight.

Because you're buying my drinks

for the night.