

Soar

Do not be afraid of what the Lord has in store

For He doesn't give you anything He can't handle.

It is now your time, seize the moment and explore

Be the joy and bring them hope, be as a lit candle

So open your eyes and spread your wings

Because girl we want to see you

SOAR.

To Go Back

I wish, I want to go back in time back in time to change his life.

To speak, to yell so to change his mind change his mind to something bright.

He fought, he lost only this fight only this war had already been won.

I know, he knew there's a saving light a saving light ending night.

With this truth, I can say,
I know I will see him
on that bright beautiful day.

Love and miss you.

This isn't a farewell nor a goodbye because I know I shall see you again.
Whether this life or in the highest high, no matter our paths or where we have been.

I was young when you took me under care, wings of godly advise and protection.
I was encouraged with a love so rare a safe place with no fear or rejection.

So this is not a farewell forever nor is it a loved ones promise broken.
Know I'm for you in every endeavor and these words on this page are my token.

What I'm trying to say in the hardest of ways is that I will love and miss you all of my days.

Title

This is a poem.

With rhymes and a deep meaning

Read between the lines

What was the author thinking?

Capturing feeling

The words weighing more

Each one chosen specifically

Delve into your mind

Each meaning something different

Different experiences

Different light

But this poem has a meaning

Something hidden in plain sight

The way the letter line up

The way the words rearrange

Question the questions that are being questioned

Your Mirror's Image

She tells me her mood is affected by the weather:
it's the way she smiles that brings out the sun,
and its her sadness that calls the rain.
The world stops spinning when she hurts.
A princess when she walks pulling eyes and turning faces.
Her radiance envied by the stars.
The girl she sees in the mirror isn't the same as the woman I see.
Timid, her eyes down cast her small figure beaten and bruised from the lies the world spits.

Eyes
bright chin up the words deflected
the lies ignored the world owned.
Where she sees failure and fault I see beauty and spunk.
No matter what people say or what people think it is your self worth that determines who you will be in this life
In my eyes you're priceless. A gem among coal
A light in the darkness. Smile in a crowd of sadness
I want and wish you could see the way I see you.
But who am I to speak. I just reflect what you want to see.